

This work has been submitted to NECTAR, the Northampton Electronic Collection of Theses and Research.

Article

Title: Living in a material world

Creators: MacLellan, F.

Example citation: MacLellan, F. (2008) Living in a material world. Bibliotech. Spring, p. 9.

Version: Submitted version

<http://nectar.northampton.ac.uk/4261/>

Building materials take centre stage with new collection.

As part of our commitment to improving library collections we have recently added a new collection to Avenue Library. The materials library contains catalogues and trade literature as well as British Standard and Building Research Establishment information. The collection also includes many samples of materials and products leading to a tactile collection that gives a superior understanding of how a material will look, feel and work in your building or room.

The collection covers many different product areas, including, but not limited to: Tiles; glass; bricks; worktop finishes; leather; paint finishes; and lighting. The collection is regularly maintained by the Royal Institute of British Architects Enterprises (RIBA) and we will be adding new items to the collection as appropriate. The collection is an exciting new resource for architectural technology, interior and product design students and staff and will also be of interest to anyone who is involved in home decorating. For more information about the collection, please contact Fiona or Adele at Avenue Library or why not come along and see and feel the collection for yourself!