Research Aim

An exploration of the concept of professional identity through a critique of the concept, implementation and impact of EYPS as a new professional model.

Research Objectives

• To explore the separatist versus integrated models of professional identity.

• To interrogate and critique the concept of Early Years Professional Status in relation to wider policy and professional roles, including international comparisons.

• To analyse the impact of achieving Early Years Professional Status on candidates’ roles and practice and on perceptions of their professional identity.

• To critically evaluate the success and limitations of the Early Years Professional Status model for developing a profession (as opposed merely to professional development) and to assess the potential implications for future policy and practice.
Context

• International focus on the importance of Early Childhood Education and Care.

• Early Years Professional Status imposed by English Government rather than grown organically.
• Traditionally professions in England have developed along a separatist rather than an integrated model of service delivery.

• Each profession has its own ‘professional identity’ which shapes and impacts on the services provided.
Historically health, education and social care provision for children and families have reflected the separatist model.

Increasingly it has been recognised that the needs of children and families do not divide easily into these areas, despite understanding of this being evident in the early pioneers of early years education.

The contemporary significance of the ecological model cannot be overstated. It has provided a major starting point for understanding the link between children and their community.

I offer to the prologue now, in advance, in the hope that others too maybe moved to get into the act. ‘The play’s the thing’.

The Professions

Professionalisation to Professional
History can remind us that it is worth working for the things you believe in and the study of history shows how important it is to record ideas and practices for those who follow to ponder.

Though much remains to be learned about how to lay necessary foundations during the pre-school years, which will enable children to achieve eventually the fullest measure of their potential, yet enough is known to take some action now...promoting optimal emotional, social and intellectual development; preventing neglect and deprivation; and, most difficult of all, for breaking into the vicious circle of the emotional or intellectually deprived children of today becoming tomorrow’s parents of yet another generation of deprived children.

Pringle and Naidoo (1975:169).
We need to provide our children with the social and emotional capability to break the cycle .... our babies, children and young people deserve the best emotional base they can have to make the best of their lives....

The professions have become more, not less, socially exclusive over time. Despite a sharp growth in professional employment opportunities over recent decades, the professions are becoming the preserve of people from an increasingly small part of the social spectrum.

Key Findings

• Overwhelming agreement that EYPS was a positive and welcomed development.

• A new professional space with flexible borders is developing at the intersection of education, health and social care.

• The title ‘Early Years Professional’ was not being used.

The Early Years Professional
In conclusion...
An ‘essential’
not just desirable member of the wider children’s workforce...
...an holistic leadership professional - an advocate for young children.
However...

...it will be a missed opportunity if the government continues not to recognise the workforce in real terms, as they will continue, as Osgood (2010) contends, to reinforce the social injustice, poverty and low status that persist in the early years workforce.
Finally....The Theoretical Framework

How the Early Years Professional supports understanding of the under theorised ‘Chaotic-System’
